

"I think we would have closed down," without the installation of Morgan RSMs in 1999, says McKechnie. A 2005 labor strike and subsequent buyout of the mill would have closed it, McKechnie says, but Morgan technology made Ivaco more productive. "The RSM allowed us to stay competitive and be sought after by buyers," he says. "Now we're working 24 hours a day, seven days a week and our orders are now going up and up and up."

Cory Hopkins is a freelance writer. He can be reached at editorial@wbjournal.com.

Close Window